Life Begins in the InDesign Clipping Mask InDesign is a great application for creating print-ready documents. However, its layer-based editing system and nested masks make it a great application for those who want to get an image into their brochures, booklets, and other promotional products. Basic image editing and manipulation, such as cropping, altering the size and color of an image, and resizing, is as simple with InDesign as it is with Photoshop. A fairly light learning curve makes it possible for even a beginner to alter an image. Image cropping is a fundamental part of InDesign's editing system. A clipping mask is a way to keep that cropped image intact while removing the border of the original image and adding new content around the image. (Find out about clipping masks in the next section.) To crop an image in InDesign, follow these steps: 1. Open the image that you want to alter. 2. Create a rectangle in the art area in the layout. Choose Rectangle on the Home tab or the Rectangle tool on the Tools panel. Create a rectangle by placing the mouse pointer on the art area and then clicking. 3. Size the rectangle exactly like the image to be cropped. Figure 2-14 shows the rectangle and a cropping rectangle that I created. 4. Choose Edit⇒Invisible⇒Clip and then click on the art area where you want to start the new image in the layout. 5. Choose Edit⇒Invisible⇒Apply Clipping Mask and then click inside the clipping rectangle. 6. Drag the handles of the rectangle's sides onto the image. The cropped image will appear on the art area and will be faded to black. As you drag the handles, the cropped image will appear. After the image is in place on the art area and in the clipping mask, you can easily add content around the image in the art area. Simply drag the clipped image into another art box on the layout or in the art area of the same layout. Credit 2 7. Remove the clipping mask by clicking on the

Categories Search Month: April 2017 Hello readers and welcome to this post in which we are going to be exploring the concept of memory and how we can use it to our advantage. What is it? Simply put, memory is the capacity to retain information. You can use it as a way of retaining and accessing past knowledge, which can be a great help to us when we are learning new things. Memory can be divided into short-term and long-term memories. Short-term memory is the amount of information that we can hold in our minds at any one time. This is what we call working memory and it is split into three parts. The first is called the central executive, which is made up of three main parts, which include attention, working memory and processing speed. Attention is how we are able to make sense of the information, such as if something is important or unimportant. Working memory is what we use to hold information in our minds for a short space of time, such as a number or a word. Processing speed is how quickly we are able to process information, such as a number, and use it in a task. So, our short-term memory lasts for a short time, so that we can process what we are learning, rather than remember it for a long period of time. In our lives this is how we would remember things we have learnt at school or at work, such as dates or first names. When we are feeling stressed out, anxious or even having a bad day, our short-term memory is being compromised. The second is called long-term memory, which is what we call our “mental diaries.” This is what we remember “in the longer term” and includes the memories we have of our past. This is much longer in comparison to our short-term memories and can hold up to 14 days of the past. We also have to have the capacity to access this information, which is where long-term memory is split into two parts: declarative or explicit memory and non-declarative or implicit memory. Declarative memory is the part of our long-term memory which we can remember things like names, faces and places. Non-declarative memory is the capacity to remember information that we have to perform a task, such as remembering a word you need in order

Tommy Robinson will be joined by Ukip leader Gerard Batten and EDL founder Tommy Robinson at the European Parliament in Strasbourg on 23 April, in what has been called “a call to arms for the alt-right.” Front National leader Marine Le Pen and UKIP’s Gerard Batten are also expected to attend. Alt-right protestors will be making their way from Holland to the European Parliament with a series of “Freedom March” rallies around Europe. Right-wing organization Pro-Europe called the rally “a warning shot to the European progressive movement,” in an email on 12 April. The “downtrodden people of Europe” are petitioning European authorities to recognize these unassimilated “migrants” as “migrant people.” Speakers include Robinson, British politician and chairman of the English Defence League (EDL); United Kingdom Independence Party (UKIP) politician Gerard Batten; French far-right politician, journalist and blogger Marion Marechal-Le Pen and German far-right politician Martin Sellner, who is of Austrian citizenship. The “migrant issue is a kind of test for the extreme right,” one of the organizers told Euronews on Tuesday. He added that the demonstration was a “precursor of a larger march on Bastille Day” in France, as the far-right “will no longer abstain to take power.” Founded in 1994, the EDL is an English far-right political party that advocates a form of English nationalism and opposes immigration from the Islamic world. Robinson is facing trial in May for contempt of court after filming outside the Old Bailey while he was on bail for a charge of filming a child in a sexual act and distributing indecent images of children. He denies the allegations. Since the trial Robinson has been on bail, leading to reports of a possible escape to Ireland. Marion Marechal-Le Pen, who leads the National Rally party in France, is set to speak at the pro-Empire March, which is expected to attract thousands of supporters. The party is a new political party created by her father, National Front party leader Marine Le Pen. Jean-Marie Le Pen, Marine’s grandfather, headed the party in the 1970s and 1980s. Marine’s uncle, former Front National (FN) politician and
