Glutamate receptors have been implicated in the pathophysiology of various acute and chronic pain conditions, such as neuropathic pain. Recently, the ionotropic N-methyl-d-aspartate (NMDA) subtype of glutamate receptors has emerged as a potential target for the development of novel analgesics because antagonism of this receptor subtype might produce a therapeutic profile distinct from that of currently available nonselective, non-NMDA receptor antagonists. Here we review recent data indicating that the subunit GluR1 of the NMDA receptor may be a particularly good therapeutic target for the treatment of neuropathic pain, and a selective GluR1 antagonist is emerging as a promising agent for the treatment of pain conditions in various experimental animal models.Takamatsu Nōjō-teien Takamatsu Nōjō-teien is a park and villa complex in Takamatsu, Kagawa Prefecture, Japan. It was listed as one of the "100 Fine Castles and Villas of Japan" by the Japan Castle Foundation. History The Nōjō mansion was built in the Edo period (1600s–1868) as the base of Nōjō-dono, a samurai of the Nakamura clan. In 1870, the mansion was purchased by the Kawajiri clan, who were referred to as the Yodogahōi (sea otter merchants) on account of their wealth. In 1940, the building was acquired by the Takamatsu City government, which was facing financial difficulties at the time. In 1942, the mansion and its surrounding land was donated to the city for use as a park and public venue. The park was open to the public in 1947. Awards The Takamatsu City Council selected the Takamatsu Nōjō-teien as one of "The 100 Fine Castles and Villas in Japan" at a meeting in 2003.

We're here to help..Q: Determining Change in a Time Dependent System I'm trying to build a time-dependent system that models the perfect balance between two forces that act at equal speeds and different intensities. It is to be used to predict the behavior of a system for a given change in a process parameter. I'm looking for help in how to determine the rate of change of the balance of forces as a function of time. One force pushing against the system is a linear spring, the other force is an oscillatory force. The process in question is the force acting on the system. The change in that force is the net force minus the spring force and oscillatory force. I know that x is the displacement and t is time. For this model, I simply want to plot the forces as a function of time and the displacement as a function of time. The spring force is simply a constant and the oscillatory force is sinusoidal. A: First you should consider what you already know. The mass is constant. The force in the spring is linear. The frequency is constant. The normal force is constant. With this information you can make equations. Force from the spring $$F_s = kx$$ Normal force $$F_n = mg$$ Change in spring force $$F_s = F_s + dF_s=kx + dF_s$$ Change in net force $$F_n - F_s = F_n - kx = mg + dF_s$$ Now you can take the derivative: $$\frac{df_s}{dt} = \frac{dF_s}{dt} = \frac{kx + dF_s}{m}$$ Change in normal force $$F_n - F_s = F_n - kx = dF_s$$ You can treat dF_s like a force. Then you have two forces acting on the mass with forces dF_s and F_n. If you want to solve a differential equation, go to the math.stackexchange.com and ask there.
